Cobb is the one man on the club above 300, and Ty is barely over the mark. There is only one other member of the club above 250, the same being Pep Young. The rest are all under 240. Batting of this sort would annoy any set of athletes, but a club minus good pitching must go out and get runs or perish. The Yanks are batting only a trifle harder than the Tigers. But they have the pitching to protect a weak attack and carry it safely through. The Yanks and Red Sox depend more upon their pitchers stopping the other club's batsmen than they do upon swatting the other club's pitchers. And you can go and wager your ultimate shirt that good pitching is the most valuable factor on any machine.

A year is quite a spell of time. A year ago Hal Chase was considered all through -Schupp was on the bench, about to be discarded the Dodgers were pennant favorites-and a number of folks were laughing at the statement that Tris Speaker might beat out Ty Cobb.

"It is my contention," writes R. K. F., "that Fielder Jones is the best manager in the American League. A friend says I'm nutty. How about it?" The Fielder is considerable manager—one of the best of which there are, or is. But to say that he is a better manager than one Cornelius McGillieuddy, winner of six pennants and three world series, may be going a trifle too far. But not even Mack surpasses Jones in getting the last ounce of ability out of a club, which is one of the essentials toward managerial success.

Summer Boston beat Detroit in every vital series. When the final showdown arrived in the dusty stretch, Carrigan's club went West and mopped up in the Jungle Country. This spring, starting the Western swing, the Red Sox romped merrily over Ty Cobb and mates without exerting any undue effort.

"Why is it." more than one noncombatant has asked, "that Detroit can't beat this club?"

The answer is about as complex as adding two and two. Boston is a trific stronger in the infield, and with an outfield nearly as valuable, despite the pressure of Cobb. Cobb. Veach and Heilman are far stronger in attack than Hooper, Lewis and Walker, but not as good in all-around defensive play.

Detroit has a stronger team on attack, on the average, but when this attack is to sood in against Boston pitching it is always rolled back and broken up. With his strongest system crushed, Jennings is then up against it. His defence inch good enough to hold any strong rival in check, so the result is near unto a cinch when Red Sox pitchers move to the charge.
